VANKEE TALKS OF R. E. LEE

Charles Francis Adams, Sr., Pays Tribute

To Confederate Chieftain's Memory.

Massachusetts Man Recalls Remarks of Senator Summer but Not to Disadvantage of Record of Confederate Chieftain's Memory.

LEXINGTON, Va., Jan. 18.—Charles Francis Adams, sr., of Boston, head of the Massachusetts Historical society, was the principal speaker here today at the Robert E. Lee centenary celebration. He said in part:
Here to commemorate the centennial of the birth of Lee, I do not propose to enter into any eulogium of the man, to recount the well known events of his career, or to the aventing superiatives also, I shall institute no comparisons. One of a community which the hold has been sufficiently done by others far better qualified for the task Eschewich was the first of the common of the mation which had murtured him, in my swoord mate place to be assigned him has been sufficiently done by others far better qualified for the task. Eschewich was the first of the common of the man to recount the well known events of his career, or to the aventual to the had of the common of the man to recount the well known events of his career, or to the aventual to the had of the common of the man to recommend the content of the first of the task Eschewich was the first of the task. Eschewich was the had of the Massachusetts Historical society, but, a whole generation having passed away since Charles Summer uttered the had been sufficiently done by others far better qualified for the task Eschewich was contented by the content of the man to recommend the man to recommend the man to be a community which the had of the Massachusetts Historical society, but, a whole generation having passed away since Charles Summer uttered the had of the Massachusetts Historical society, but, a whole generation having passed away since Charles Summer uttered the had of the Massachusetts Historical society. The situation is thus to a degree of man and the training the passed away since Charles S

Gramatic.

First Yankee to Speak.

So far as I am aware, never until now has one born and nurtured in Massachusette—a typical bred-in-the-bone yankee, if you please—addressed at its invitation a Virginian audience, on topics relating to the war of secossion and its foremost confederate military character.

The charge still most commaly made against Lee in that section of the common country to which I belong and with which I sympathize, is that in plain language, he was false to his flag—educated at the national academy, an officer of the United States army, he abjured his allegiance and bore arms against the government he had sworn to uphold. In other words he was a military traitor, I state the charge in the terstest language possible. Having done so, and admitting the facts as technically true, I add as the result of much patient study and most mature reflection, that under similar conditions I would myself have done exactly what Lee did.

Coming directly to the point, I maintain coming directly to the point, I maintain Coming directly to the point, I maintain that every man in the eleven states seceding from the union had in 1851, whether he would or not to decide for himself whether to adhere to his state or to the nation; and I finally assert that whichever way he decided, if only he decided honestly, putting self-interest behind him, he did right.

putting self-interest bening him, no right.

But this, it will be replied, though true of the ordinary man and citizen, should not have been true of the graduate of the military academy, the officer of the army of the United States. Winfield Scott and George G. Thomas did not so construe their allegiance; when the issue was presented, they remained true to their flag and to their oaths. Robert E. Lee, false to his oath and flag, was a renegade.

Answer to Proposition. Answer to Proposition.

The answer is brief and to the point—the conditions in the several cases were not the same—neither Scott nor Thomas was Lee. It was our Boston Dr. Holmes who long ago declared that the child's education begins about 250 years before it is born; and it is quite impossible to separate any man—least of all, perhaps, a full-blooded Virginian—from his prenatal traditions and living environment. From arate any man—least of all, perhaps, a full-blooded Virginian—from his prenatal traditions and living environment. From them he drew his being; in them he exists. Robert E. Lee was the embodiment of those conditions, the creature of that environment—a Virginian of Virginians. To ask Lee to raise his hand against Virginia was like asking Montrose or Mac-Callum to head a force designed for the subjection of the Highlands and the destruction of the Clans. Where such a stern election is forced upon a man as confronted Lee the single thing the fair-minded investigator has to take into account is the loyaity, the single-mindedness of the election. Was it devoid of selfishness; was it fresh from any baser and more sordid worldly motive, ambition, price, jealousy, revenge or self-interest? To this question there can, in the case of Lee, be but one answer. When, after long and trying mental wrestling, he threw in his fate with Virginia he knowingly sacrificed everything which man prizes most—his dearly beloved home, his means of support, his professional standing, his associates, a brilliant future assured to him. Born a slaveholder in a race of slaveholders, he was himself no defender, much less an advocate of slavery; on the contrary, he did not hesitate to pronounce it in his place "a moral and political evil." Later he manumitted his slaves. He did not believe in secession; as a right reserved under the constitution he pronounced it "ide talk;" but, as a Virginian, he also added.

der the constitution he pronounced it "idle talk;" but, as a Virginian, he also added. "If the government is disrupted, I shall re-turn to my native state and share the miseries of my people and save in defense will draw my sword on none." Early Days of War.

Confiscation of Property.

In the matter of confiscation it has been computed that the freeing of the slaves by act of war swept out of existence property valued at some $2.000,000,000, while over and above this a system of simultaneous reconstruction subjected the disfranchised bondsman. For a community consplcuously masterful and notoriously quick to resent affront, to be thus placed by alien force under the civil rule of those of a different and distinctly inferior race, only lately their property, is not physical torment, it is true, but that it is mild or considerate treatment can hardly be contended. Yet this—slave confiscation and re-Confiscation of Property.

COST LESS THAN THREE THOUSAND

Mrs. Kimball, President, and Mrs. Brandels, Treasurer, Submit Their Annual Reports Full of Interest.

Mrs. T. I. Kimball, president and Mrs. A. D. Brandels, treasurer of the Creche. show many things of unusual interest in mitted. Mrs. Brandels, for instance, shows that the cost for maintaining the Creche with its 234 little waifs for the year 1908 was precisely $2,844.99 and she gives an itemized account to show just where every cent of the money went. Collections for the year ending December 31, amount to

$1,522.75, but they are incomplete. Mrs. Kimbali departs from the ordinary routine of "annual reports" and gives a very interesting narrative of what has been done during the year. She takes ocew days.

The following noncommissioned officers casion to point out a tribute to the conservation of the management in saying that it has rejected several offers of "traveling strangers" to put on various entertainments on a profit-sharing basis, The president's report that of the treasurer plan was received with acclamation. The Country club was freely tendered for the day; the tickets were all written by Mrs. Lemist to save expense; the beautiful prizes donated, as were the excellent refreshments. Hundreds came, and we realized $359. Besides the money raised, this gathering of people, in the name of charity created an interest in our work among new population, and awakened zeal in the old. The Creahe was on every tongue, its aims were discussed, and its needs made known.

Christmas Joyous to Tots.

Christmas was kept joyously by the small ones and a few of the mothers. The tree was delightful, the gifts most bountiful. A more interesting or pathetic sight can hardly be imagined than the upturned faces of the children, unused to galety or the possession of new toys, the small hands clasped, hardly daring to speak lest it all wanish. As one of our members said, it was one of the most simple and lovely Christmas festivals she ever attended. I hope we may all enjoy it another year, Many thanks to our generous friends, the newspapers, for their unfailing courtesy, and to the host of contributors, whose names, owing to limited space, cannot be given here, but can be seen posted at the Creche.

Hoping that our labors through the comming year may be of greater value to the community than ever before, I close this report.
